

Artificial Intelligence and Neural Network modelling in Fusion Research and Engineering

J. Svensson

At JET has been developed a number of models over the last years using artificial neural networks. These range from automatic real-time analysis of charge exchange spectra to disruption prediction and statistical investigation of parameter dependencies. In this seminar an overview of this development will be given together with a short introduction to the methods used.